Evacuation orders for 150,000 LA residents

California Governor's Office of Emergency Services says 150,000 people are now under evacuation orders in Los Angeles county - in areas affected by the Palisades and Eaton Fires. More than 700 people are being housed in nine shelters* in the country.

An evacuation order means there is an immediate threat to life and those impacted need to leave immediately, the organisation says.

Evacuation warnings, which differ from evacuation orders, are also in place for both the Palisades Fire and Eaton Fire. An evacuation warning means there's impending danger to life or property and advice is to gather your belongings and prepare to evacuate.

An executive order designed to speed up the rebuilding of lost homes in LA has been put in place by California Governor Gavin Newsom.

The order suspends the California Coastal Act, which work to minimise the environmental impact of proposed building projects, as well as suspending some permits in order to make rebuilding quicker and more affordable.

There are also protections against price gouging* on services related to the fires such as building materials and storage services.

He says "one thing I won't give in to is delay. Delay is denial for people."

"The executive order I signed today will help cut permitting delays, an important first step in allowing our communities to recover faster and stronger."
